Erving Goffman may or may not have been a symbolic interactionist, but he was undoubtedly influenced by G.H.Mead. Mead distinguished between the I, or the spontaneous self, and the Me, or the socialized self, accenting the ongoing tension between the two. It was this tension – and in particular the discrepancy between our spontaneous and socialized selves – that intrigued Goffman.

-- Philip Manning, author of Erving Goffman and Modern Sociology "The author has offered a provocative treatment of three central figures in modern social theory. His account of Goffman and Garfinkel is very perceptive, illuminating, and powerful, while his account of Parsons is original. There is nothing quite like this in the field."
