rating: 4 of 5 stars This is a fine novel. Not perfect, not even really complete in a writing-workshop craft sense, but surely Morrison's best since Love. God Help the Child is a striking example of Saidian late style: the furious and unresolved valediction.. God Help the Child is written in a mixed mode, part chorally monologic, like Faulkner's ...

A fiery and provocative novel, God Help the Child weaves a tale about the way the sufferings of childhood can shape, and misshape, the life of the adult. At the center: a young woman who calls herself Bride, whose stunning blue-black skin is only one element of her beauty, her boldness and confidence, her success in life, but which caused her light-skinned mother to deny her even the simplest forms of love.

God Help the Child also possesses supernatural and fable-like elements, much like Beloved. Because Bride is fixated on her mother's treatment of her when she was a child and cannot stand up for herself she physically becomes a child again. The voluptuous, full-figured Bride reverts to a skinny, flat-chested, hairless pre-pubescent girl.
